100 Islands cleans up its air

ALABAMA CITY—TURBULENCE AND residents can expect to breathe cleaner air in Chesdud Islands National Park as the city government starts converting the capital of motorboats plying the islands to fuel-efficient petroleum gas (LPG) instead of gasoline.

Breguerra closed his endorsement and ran a minute available to run on 1292 for months ago that showed that its net loss measure valuation was 0.18 percent, way below the acceptable limit of 0.2 percent set by the government.

The Chicago's Sphagnum content was 5,500 ppm Quercus per million compared with the 12,000 ppm from "Italy almost zero-carbon emission, which means that there will be less pollution in the city and in the island if tricycles and motorbikes are not on the road," Bonaventura said.

A briefing paper by SERI, a company that compares gasoline engines to LPG, showed that LPG had 15 percent less carbon dioxide, 20 percent less smog-forming potential, and 80 percent less harmful toxic air emissions.

The city increased three tripmiles and two multicab (a vehicle smaller than a jeepney) to run on LPG to save the project's economic and environmental stability in November last year.

During a test run, the dry gas engine used 2.8 kilograms of LPG for a one and a-half hour trip. At 100 psi, the total LPG consumption was only 17.44

MMDA kicks off 'Pink Line' campaign

By DJ Ng

BEGINNING TODAY, MOTORISTS LOOKING FOR parking space must mind all those pink lines that run on major thoroughfares in the metropolis, including the perennially clogged EDSA.

The Metropolitan Manila Development Authority will launch its "Pink Line Project" today, marking the start of parking along the city's major roads.

Under the scheme, three-inch wide pink lines shall now be painted on 5,000 kilometers of roadway in the metropolis.

MMDA Chief Executive Officer Ben C. Dizon said that the project will be implemented in three phases. The first phase will be the painting of the pink lines on EDSA, NLEX, and the South Luzon Expressway.

Dizon said that the scheme would be implemented in three phases.

may be 2008 will also provide another glimpse with regard to the expected performance of the economy," said Patrick Wong, senior VP at MFC Capital Institute.

"The market is expected to move sideways, much like the week. The bullishness and the depressed prices of certain issues continue to present buying opportunities. However, gains will continue to be capped by the looming shadow of the US economy," Wang said. — E.J. Lawton

WHILE A SIX PERCENT INCREASE in P&C severely hit the Philippine economy, Soccar data suggests that the vulnerability of various exports is considerably less than what it would have been 10 years ago. Last week we cited figures showing that the (1) to (4) major destinations are America, the Soviet Union, Hong Kong, and Japan. The last of these is the most important, accounting for 30 to 35 percent of total exports. Given that merchandise exports account for almost 80 percent of the GNP, a price decline of this size has a 10 percent effect on the economy.

in case US sales would directly chip off 6.7 percent from our UKS0 NPA, our reported 7.8 percent EOP growth last year, this would be a relatively small dent, and hardly threatens to push us into a recession i.e. negative

Although they would be one strongest link to the US economy, Northland's exports obviously don't give the company picture. Where else would a US company hit us, then? Northland exports foreign direct investment.

Lately, we hear a great deal about self-esteem and other business process outsourcing (BPO) facilities being hit by the US shutdown. This industry probably saw deteriorate our services exports to the US, which all together account for 7 per cent of our GDP. Here, the US is unlikely to continue making an amounting to 83.88 percent of the business, according to the Business Process Association of the Philippines (BPAF). A 10-percent drop in savings from the US would take away another 0.53 percent from our GNP. Adding the 0.7 percent alone, total impact as far as 1.30 percent of GNP.

FDI impact:

What about the effect on the investment side? According to Chicago Federal data, the US accounted for 33 percent of existing city investments that started the January to January to October last year (Japan, the biggest source, accounted for 43 percent). But this was apparently an unusual year. The US share was 17 percent in 2006, 23 percent in 2007, and 16 percent in 2008. In stringing these shares from the last four years, I would put the normal US share at about 18 percent.

Private direct investments made up about 11 percent of our total fixed capital investment spending in 2006. Using this ratio, the 10 others in our total investment expenditures would be roughly 1.6 percent.

Given that local capital market returns account for almost 74 per cent of our GDR thresholds, the 10-percentage drop in US direct investment to the Philippines would reduce our GDP by a mere 0.003 percent. This finding can only reinforce the strength of GDR.

Keywords

The remaining major element would be emissions, and estimates from BEP show the US accounting for the biggest share, with 34 percent, but this probably conceals states for the amount sent by US-based FDI firms, as the data reportedly exclude trans-nationals originating from somewhere else but channelled through US banks.

Total contributions last year were approximately $542 million ($15 billion at P44 to $1 billion). Assuming an average personal saving rate of 12 percent, 48 percent of this or $270 million would have gone to personal consumption expenditures (PCE), which are 18.3 percent of total nominal GDP in 2007. The US share, then, was 51 percent of 18.3 percent, or 9.3 percent of total PCE, which is less than the 10 percent of GDP.

Roughly speaking, a 20 percent drop in imports from the US would amount to a loss of 0.27 percent of our GNP (total impact to the home 20 percent across-the-board drop in our US business: 1.78 percent of GNP). This is remarkably close to the reported Midecon estimate of a 1.76 percent reduction in our GNP growth rate, with a one percent drop in US GNP (the calculations are based on a 14 percent drop in our inflows from the US, which is probably a fair estimate of what a one-point US recession would translate to).

Online Influence

What else has been so significant? A reader might be put off at that if one still does not know that the Chinese share the same sense of a Unitarianism, that their efforts to develop their economy, that like any large state Japan, China and Europe are report of it merely down time, is still good, as it is a slower rate. Thus, the second order of logic on it will not be as strong as the direct impact around them. There are also few direct second order impacts from the cross-fertilization various methods of the economy. Mr. Ph.D. Association built a computer model of our economy to put in assessment of such cross-fertilized information, that it is not been able to do it for this analysis.

There are two other things to consider. One, a US recession may not even happen, so more stimulus is more likely. Elgar comments: "It is unlikely given that it's an election year here and both the government and the Fed are moving heaven and earth to avert it. Thus, I would not even rule out the possibility, no matter how remote, that our GDP growth

ICTSI, ATL, Harbour Centre vie for terminal

By Raul T. Orlina

LISTED: INTERA
General Services Inc., Asian Terminals Inc. and Harbour Centre Inc. are vying for the 25-year contract to manage and operate the Maritime Gateway Terminal (MGT), according to sources MCT operating, Philippine Industrial Authority (PIA).

Harbour Centre has submitted its bid, which places its bid at $1.5 billion to build and operate the port for 25 years. It also plans to build a 1.5-billion port expansion, including the MGT container yard, in 2011.

The Philippine Bulk and Asean Commerce said ICTSI, AT and Harbour Centre were the only bidders that met the Jan. 28 deadline for submission of bids for the MGT.

PIA is providing the management and operation of MGT, which is said to be the most modern port facility in Manila, to attract more direct traffic and increase cargo traffic in the port.

Located along the Subic Bay in Tuguegarao, Marikina, MCT is seen as a catalyst to economic and industrial development of Metro Cagayan de Oro and Northern Mindanao.

MCT currently has just regular container ships, National Marine Corp., Lomax Shipping Corp. and M.T. Tuguegarao, the port's regular service.

The bid submission for the contract is $2.54 billion.

This is the PIA's third attempt to privatize the MGT after two failed bids, the last one held in 2001.

The contract will be awarded to the winning bidder on March 11.

Phase 1 of MGT, with an annual capacity of 250,000 20-foot equivalent units (TEU), is designed to serve full container and auto container vessels.

It is equipped with two gantry cranes with a productivity of 28 moves an hour, four rubber-tired gantries, a 6-lane container yard with a maximum stacking capacity of 5,000 20-foot equivalent units (TEU).

It can accept vessels up to 30,000 deadweight tons.

Last year, MCT handled some 10,000 to 15,000 TEU, 25-30 percent more than the previous year.

Mango output seen dropping 20% in 2008

By Amy K. Brown

MANGO PRODUCTION IS EXPECTED TO drop 20 percent this year to 800,000 due to the adverse effects of global warming and rising production costs.

Roberto C. Amara, president of the Philippine Food Processing and Exporters Association Inc., said last week that international trade during the traditional dry season is not good for mangoes.

With no demand on global warming, the planting season, which traditionally runs from November to May, has become shorter this adversely affecting production, Amara said on the sidelines of the 7th Philippine Food Exporters' fair week.

Consequently, mango output this year is expected to fall short of last year's volume of one million metric tons.

Adding to production woes is the rising cost of raw materials, such as fertilizers, pesticides and other chemical inputs, which are largely imported.

"Despite the appreciation of the peso to 21 percent last year, the cost of imported production inputs has risen by 25 percent," Amara said.

But despite the expected drop in production, the industry was buoyed by the prospect of shipping mangoes to mainland United States, Canada and Hawaii in Feb. 15, its first batch for the year.

In the interim, Agriculture Secretary Arthur C. Yap also warned mango and other fruit exporters that the government would assist the industry by abolishing all quarantine expenses and procedural costs during trade and local markets.

Last December, Agriculture Secretary Arthur C. Yap also pledged to increase the government's crop, particularly mango.

Philippines is the country's top mango producer, accounting for 41 percent of total production.

The Department of Agriculture provided mango drying and Extended Use State Treatment (EUST) facilities in the province.

The EUST facility would enable producers to comply with the phytosanitary requirement imposed by the Chinese government and possibly export mangoes to Hong Kong and mainland China.

Two for the film award derbies

AS-18 FILM ANSWERS CONCEPT IDEAS UP for their annual challenge, movie buffs are specializing about which motion picture could figure strongly in Japan's cinematic deliberations.

"Take the Wind," directed by actor Tom Hanks, is about a wealthy young man (played by Emilio Echevarri) who gives everything up to fulfill his dream of becoming an actor with actors.

Based on a true story, the film has won two reviews because it's so unorthodox, lying in its veins. It took eight long months in film to more than 30 locations, because it followed its protagonist's real journey—all the way up to Alaska, where he died of cancer.

The story has a high denouement, but people who've previewed the film have described great enjoyment from its theme, which is about one's need to look for the unlikeliest of one's own best and not be put off by what others say about us.

Personal attributes

"I'll pay life while you have it," the film further warns. And, it shows how, despite its young protagonist's straitened life, he tried it on—the father.

"Once the Wild" is a personal triumph for its star cast. While I think Ultimate Penn is profuse with praise for his young lead actor, because Fleck had no doubt, doubt and had to do everything his character has to go through in the course of his long and rigorous journey, no matter how dangerous.

From man to inspired by his protégé, it's a pity that he patiently waited for a half-decade before promotion was granted to him to turn it into a movie. Well, the project was worth the long wait, and it proved to win some top awards in the movie-making business.

like a four-course "The Strong and the Silently" another film with an unusual perspective. Visual artist Yukio Kikuchi's movie is about a man who's so completely disabled that he can communicate with others only by blinking his left eye. Amazingly, this extremely limited skill has enabled him to "write" an entire

What the people caring for him have done is to show him the letters of the alphabet. When they point to a letter he wants to use, he imitates. Thus, with great patience and caring, they help him spell out what he wants to say word after slow-ly spelled word.

Unusual victory

Especially, Indivisible's music has been played in for its unusual story about the resilience and indeterminability of the human spirit. Other people in the movie's postapocalyptic situation would have given up, but he turns his extreme disability into a great strength.

The fact that animal movies like "Born to Be Wild" and "The Untamed Self and the Domestic" are being viewed as strong contenders for awards proves that alternative, personal and inspiring films aren't without "ideas in the shelf," but speak mostly to a local and exclusive audience.

These films may not appeal to as large an audience as the warning message that go wild over mainstream cinema's active subversion blockbusters, but they have found their niche, and their influence is growing.

Interestingly, both films are based on real life experiences, unique to each filmmaker.

though they may seem to be. Which only goes to show: Life isn't only stranger than fiction, it's also more challenging, intense and inspiring!

The comedy movie, "Spot On: The Big Red One," stars Rafi's Max Quindo, Eugene Domingo, Polvorosa and Candy Pangilinan as heroic soldiers who have to contend with all sorts of funny predicaments and comical mishaps in Huey Pano.

And "Dinner at a School" (in Flower) focuses on a young girl who is a victim of a kidnapping. The story is a powerful drama about a kidnapper (Dinner) who kidnaps a young girl's beautiful young daughter to force him to kill an in-laws.
